

Herman Miller's Embody Chair Receives FX International Interior Design Award

The Embody chair has been recognised with the 2009 International Interior Design award in the Best Workplace Seating category from FX magazine, a leading design publication based in the United Kingdom. Created in 1999, the FX awards acknowledge the best in international product and project design.

The awards were judged by an international panel of distinguished experts from the industry, including designers, ergonomists, and senior architects. Judges admired Embody for its "indisputable comfort and health benefits" and "distinctive design."

Embody is a high performance, ergonomic task chair designed by Jeff Weber and the late Bill Stumpf. It is sympathetic to the human form and the body's natural movement and it fits all users through its adaptive design and intuitive adjustment controls.
